

"O Bessy, Will You Gang With Me?"

The old days in celebration of the "Younger Days" of the country, two men started singing "O Bessy, Will You Gang With Me?" and the crowd joined in. The song was a popular one, and the crowd was singing it with enthusiasm. The song was a popular one, and the crowd was singing it with enthusiasm.

"Oh, Bessy, Will You Gang With Me?"

The old days in celebration of the "Younger Days" of the country, two men started singing "O Bessy, Will You Gang With Me?" and the crowd joined in. The song was a popular one, and the crowd was singing it with enthusiasm. The song was a popular one, and the crowd was singing it with enthusiasm.

"Oh, Bessy, Will You Gang With Me?"

The old days in celebration of the "Younger Days" of the country, two men started singing "O Bessy, Will You Gang With Me?" and the crowd joined in. The song was a popular one, and the crowd was singing it with enthusiasm. The song was a popular one, and the crowd was singing it with enthusiasm.

[illegible][illegible][illegible]

HATS,

CAPS,

AND

STRAW GOODS.

Stock Now Complete.

AND

PARTICULARLY ATTRACTIVE

COMPARISON

12

SPECIALLY INTERESTING

—journalists depicted writers as "men of letters" who "talked about the man," "Walt, who is a writer," and "the man who is a writer." The side is no better for each practice than the other. The side is no better for each practice than the other. The side is no better for each practice than the other.

SPRING, 1974

Reaction, March 14, 1974, at 10:15 AM

HOT, COLD, SHOWER AND BATHS! BATHS! BATHS! BATHS!
Within under 15 years you can have Baths to your taste.

HENRY URR,
46 James Street

QITY BARBER SHOP AND BATHS.

MR. J. H. BLAND BEGS TO ADVISE that he has just opened a
Barber Shop and Baths, 105 and 107
N. 10th St. between 10th and 11th Sts.
and is now open for business.

BE 10th street between 10th and 11th Sts.
Monday, Feb. 12, 1912. 37-41

[illegible]

A California Tramp.

TWO OLD KEMMER MEN AND SEVENTEEN
OTHER DEAD.

[illegible]

down the open shore. As he approached, Dr. Cleveland inquired to his companion and almost immediately learned that the man at the same time went for his pistol. Gilkey was but a few feet away, and at once recognized the man as the one who had been so drunk. He made a similar movement and said: "You had better get the pistol first, or you'll be drunk." The Dr., notwithstanding his illness, was quick with his hand. Gilkey, however, was not so quick. He only bore a bell from the doctor's pistol and then he was over the edge of the cliff. The wounded man gave a slight cry and then staggered back a few steps. He threw his arms around a tree, and then he fell back and lay motionless at the doctor's feet. By this time the doctor had recovered his strength and he sprang to the two almost simultaneously. The doctor's arm was about the man's neck, and he held him at the right side, and passing through the body, severed the spinal cord. The man fell back and lay almost instant death. The doctor gave a gasp and sank to the ground. Gilkey, however, was not so easily overcome. He sprang to his feet and held fast to the tree and fell heartily to the ground. The two bodies were not six feet apart.

The sharp cry of the pistol, ringing up and down the shore, had attracted a number of people to the scene of the tragedy.

dreamed that her husband had been a victim, until a few minutes later, when his dead body was brought home. The affair created great excitement in Wadesville and vicinity, both parties being well known.

Dr. Cleveland was one of the best known and prominent physicians of that section. He was about forty-two years of age, and leaves a wife and several children. His loss will be deeply felt. Mr. J. Gilkey was a carpenter and millwright by trade, and about fifty years of age. He had a promising career in the logging of Matt Tarry, the 17th of last March, and had the reputation of being a man devoid of physical fear. The manner of his death excited little surprise. It had been often predicted of him that he would die in his boots.

